Real jobs – deal or no deal?

Practical support to turn Valuing Employment Now into practice

This event provides the opportunity for three national employment champions to focus on Valuing Employment Now. They will share their own perspective on the cross government policy but more importantly will provide practical steps that delegates can take to turn policy into practice in their own organisation or situation.

Aims

By the end of the day, delegates will:

- Know more about the new Valuing Employment Now strategy;
- Understand how public sector organisations can change to make them better able to employ people with a learning disability;
- Know more about practical changes that can be made to human resources practices to support employment for people with a learning disability;

- Know more about how people with individual budgets are using their funding to gain employment.

Who should attend

Supported employment organisations and those supporting others in employment; people with learning disabilities and family carers with an interest in employment; local authority commissioners and managers; people for public sectors organisations seeking to meet their disability equality duty; human resource managers; schools, colleges and training providers; Job Centre Plus, Connexions and transition workers; employers.

BILD's quality commitment

- We are committed to promoting good practice in services through the provision of high quality and best value information and training.
- To enhance the learning experience and complement the learning materials, we will make relevant BILD publications available for purchase as part of the event.
- All our trainers are experienced practitioners and experts in their field of learning disability.
- Where possible, all our programmes will be mapped to knowledge requirements for NVQ Health and Social Care core or option units at Level 3.
